And now just a few months later they're making our first review. I just love these colours, and what's more they fit my figure perfectly. I was thinking of trying something like this myself, to give my figures a more realistic look. The company started back in 2009, and only sold to hobby shops, they now also offer a mail order service. They mainly work with three colors, Primer, Oil and Acrylic. I bought my first set from Enkidu, as they were so close to what I wanted to paint. My friend in Rome sent me some in early spring, and I've already got used to their dyes. It's hard to explain how much I love these colours, but I never want to switch back to normal colours. To me they fit the best with my DFD. But as Oliver (the owner) puts it, a good pair of DFD's need some good and bad lighting. Although he has some more colors on his list, I think he's pretty satisfied with the ones he already has. The packaging is pretty nice, with an instruction manual, clear paint thinners and a nice brush. You can order on their website, but also in art shops in europe. There are also some nice reviews on both Amazon and r/modelbuilding. I'd also suggest checking out the blog and twitter accounts, as they put out some nice little tutorials. You can also order the paints directly from them, if you don't want to buy from a store. Very nice paints, I'll definitely be getting a few more to experiment with. 0:05:00 0:05:17 Red White Flags - Nathan Reid - Dragon Pilot Review - Decal patching a Modern Terrain figure Presented by Oliver Kovacs. The first reviews are in of Dragon pilot on Red White Flags! I only got to see this figure in person a few weeks ago, and that was from his good friend Nathan. He's got some really great ideas, and this project is definitely going to get a lot of attention. The project started back in 2015, and they have so far gotten many good reviews. He's got a site for the project as well, as well as a blog post and twitter account, which contain all the latest news. He's also got a diorama on r/modelbuildig. He's also been featured on the nauticam subreddit, and there have been some good reviews on Amazon. They 82157476af
